I-Giants Inc.

March 2021- May 2023

Role: US Immigration Specialist

Responsibilities:

- ❖ Filing an H-1B petition is typically orchestrated by an employer on behalf of a foreign national aspiring to work in the United States under the H-1B visa category. Here is a comprehensive overview of the H-1B filing process:
- ❖ Disseminating CPT and OPT Offer Letters to candidates currently present in the U.S. and conducting E-Verification for both non-immigrant and immigrant visas on the USCIS Website.
- ❖ Employer's Labor Condition Application (LCA): Before initiating the H-1B petition, the employer must submit a Labor Condition Application (LCA) to the U.S. Department of Labor (DOL). The LCA mandates the employer to affirm various conditions, including adherence to prevailing wage standards, provision of working conditions akin to those of U.S. workers, and avoidance of adverse impacts on similarly employed workers. Typically, the DOL approves LCAs within a week.
- ❖ H-1B Petition Preparation: Once the LCA is certified, the employer proceeds with preparing the H-1B petition. This involves compiling various forms and supporting documents, such as Form I-129 (Petition for a Non-immigrant Worker), supporting letters, job offer letters, the beneficiary's resume, educational credentials, and other pertinent evidence.
- ❖ USCIS Processing: Once the H-1B petition is received by USCIS and selected in the lottery (if applicable), it undergoes a thorough review process. USCIS assesses the eligibility of the beneficiary, the employer's compliance with requirements, and the validity of the job offer. USCIS may request additional evidence or conduct interviews during this process.
- ❖ Approval, Denial, or Request for Evidence (RFE): Following the review, USCIS issues a decision. If approved, the beneficiary can proceed to obtain the H-1B visa stamp from a U.S. embassy or consulate abroad (if outside the U.S.). In the event of a denial or if USCIS requires additional evidence (RFE), the employer is expected to address the concerns raised to enhance the chances of approval. Experience in writing the HTTP RESTful Web services and SOAP APIs in Golang, react, and Linux.
