The Culture Index Report

The following brief narrative contains information covering:

1. Introduction to the Report
2. Traits Summary
3. Job Behavior Summary

This information should always be reviewed by a person that has attended the Culture Index Workshop or your Licensee, as this narrative does not go into the many considerations that are necessary to make an informed or educated decision on people. If you would like to attend a workshop, please consult your Licensee or contact us at support@cultureindex.com.

Introduction

The first section titled "Traits" is a summary of seven work-related characteristics. These "Traits" assess who you are outside of work, or who you are when you are not modifying your behavior to meet the needs of your surroundings. These seven work-related "Traits" are inherent behaviors and are typically established by ages 8-12.

The "Traits" summary portion will help you and others understand how you make decisions, what your communication style is like, the pace of the work you engage in naturally and your inclination towards detail orientation or conformity.

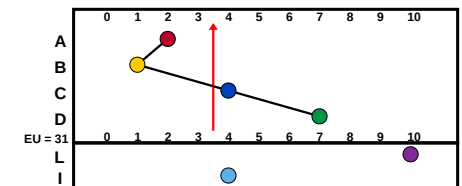

The second section of this report entitled "Job Behaviors" is a summary of how you perceive you need to behave to meet the demands of your existing job and the responsibilities you are accountable for. This summary may also be helpful in assisting you and other people as to the cause and/or effect of stress or possible morale issues, if prevalent.

Since Culture Index is not a test, there is no pass/fail. The purpose of this instrument is to help our supervisors and managers to not only understand themselves and their own management style, but to also understand the job from your perspective.

Traits Summary

This is a helpful, unselfish person who prefers to work in a supportive capacity. They dislike conflict and may try to sidetrack confrontation through diplomacy. A peace keeper, this individual prefers harmony and may try to maintain it by peacekeeping. They dislike politicking and will do their best to put others into the best light possible. They tend to avoid taking risky or faultfinding action.

This is a helpful person who does for others because it's the right thing to do and because they don't want to rock the boat by saying "no". They dislike confrontation and understand cooperation and diplomacy will maintain the peace they require. This person is capable of both analytical and task-oriented labor and can perform both meticulously. This person dislikes changes and may lose concentration and momentum if approached in the middle of a task. They are capable of accepting variety, as long as they are informed in advance or change is not continuous and pressure is not applied. Environmental pressures and malcontent behavior in the office may also prove disruptive. This person's drive in life is to be accurate and specific. They are conscientious, rule-following skillful employees. They work hard to maintain a level of skill and knowledge that sets them apart, but they require outside approval to be content. They may need guidance with unfamiliar tasks and may become unhappy in the presence of risk or criticism. This individual may take any criticism personally, but will also take praise as their highest form of motivation. They are most productive in a harmonious environment as confrontation makes them hesitate or even stop until further guidance is given.

Naturally careful and preferring to avoid risk-oriented situations, this person tends to defer to others when decisions are requested. This person prefers to work on automated, clearly defined projects.

A reserved person who needs time to become comfortable with others. Once familiarity is established, they are open with individuals, but may continue to remain quiet in groups. They speak in a factual and direct manner. This individual prefers work of a technical nature.

This person likes variation in their work, but is capable of focusing on redundant tasks for short periods of time without losing interest.

This person may seem compliant in most situations but is capable of exhibiting more expeditious behavior when implied from the work assigned.

Strives to achieve a consistently reliable level of accuracy and follows through to ensure success.

Structure and guidelines will aid this person in their quest for certainty. Tends to avoid confrontation and may not directly question authority, but will seek safer routes.

The desire for safety may push this person to seek direction at first, but as their comfort level grows they will want to express their knowledge in their own way. At this point, they may ask questions when necessary, but can otherwise want the latitude to act on their own, as over-supervision may be perceived as distrust.

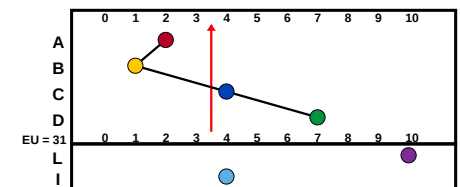

The best reward for this person is individualized, private recognition. Criticism is taken personally and is perceived as a doubt of their ability or truthfulness and should therefore be undertaken with tact.

This individual is behaviorally flexible. They can behave out of character and have some stress resistance. However, long periods of stress may tire this individual and such situations will therefore be avoided if possible.

This person does not easily share their feelings and prefers to think with their head, rather than with their heart. Their detachment from events does not mean they are unaware of events or others feelings. They are distancing themselves from the distraction of emotions in order to think more clearly.

Capable of innovative thinking, this person may surprise with their unusual thought processes and solutions. They are capable of taking processes in different directions and should be encouraged down new paths. Ingenuity is enhanced by experience and education.

Job Behavior Summary

Due to the work culture, this individual perceives the job requiring an accommodating, amiable personality and they are adjusting their behavior accordingly. Frustration at the lack of personal freedom and the degree of structure may cause some work dissatisfaction.

Adapting to the existing work culture has required more of a factual or analytical focus on processes including but not limited to working with data, systems and tangible aspects of the work environment, rather than people.

A more methodical approach is seen as necessary within the work culture and may be seen as tiresome, due to the increased need for more repetitive, methodical, and predictable work assignments.

The position is perceived as requiring quick responses to change and pressure and the ability to handle multiple tasks at one time. These requirements correspond with this individual's basic traits.

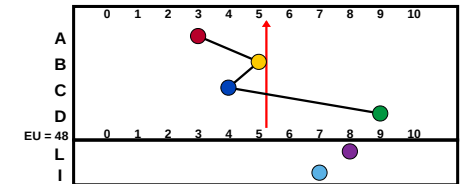

This person is attempting to modify an inherent high sense of detail perhaps in order to delegate work or to become more flexible.

This individual is perceiving a need to apply a lower degree of energy units to their work environment than they naturally possess. This could indicate morale issues and should be addressed, as they are not utilizing their full potential.

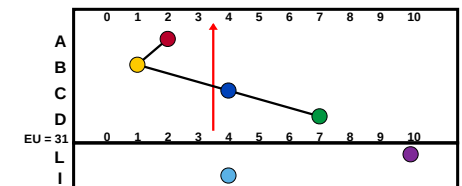

This person is not utilizing their natural level of Ingenuity in the work culture. This may result in feelings of under utilization and morale issues.

This person perceives the need to apply a very high degree of objectivity and logic mindedness to their work. Personal and other's emotions are set aside. Work and its various aspects are being approached in a very black and white manner. They may be perceived as cold or uncaring by others, when in fact, they are simply pursuing work goals in an objective manner regardless of their own, or anyone else's feelings. This does not mean they do not care, but they do not allow their empathy to deter from the work at hand.
